This webinar was organized under the guidance of Dr. Madhavrao Kinhalkar , President of the Society and Dr. Panjab Chavan , Principal. Dr. Hrishikesh Chaudhary, Assistant Professor, Department of Zoology, University of Guwahati, Guwahati, Assam was present for this webinar. In this webinar, Chaudhary Hrishikesh discussed "Identifying the fish: the step towards conservation."
Technical Session Resource Person and topic Covered	Speaking in his lecture, Sir said that if you want to conserve wildlife, it is very important to identify that wildlife in advance. In today's digital age, the new generation does not know much about wildlife. So, you need to get to know all these animals first. In the same way, aquatic fish are also very important. Many species, including aquatic fish, are now threatened by man-made problems. Increasing pollution, overuse of fish, depletion of their natural breeding grounds, dams are also hampering their migration from one place to another. So, it is important to know the fish scientifically before conservation. He explained the skills required for fish identification at this time.

	He also challenged the newcomers to study in close proximity to nature and play a vital role in the conservation of these wildlife species.
